What Does Being Latino Mean To You?
Responses from UTSA Students

“Being Latino to me means expressing my culture in everyday life. Educating others on my heritage and family. To me it also means that I am a part of a traditional culture that has shaped my life and has played a part in aspiring for a higher education.”
Paula Celis, Colombian, Business Management

“Being a Latina isn’t something you know, it’s something you feel—with our traditions, music, food, and most importantly our family. One thing I learned since a little girl from my family is to be proud of who you are and where you come from and that’s what I feel about being Latina.”
Susana Mancera, Mexican American, Psychology

“I am Colombian so I love to talk and share about my culture whenever I can. Being a Latina woman in the US lets me represent a good image of how each of our cultures are authentic and unique. To be Latina or Latino means to be proud, authentic, diverse and most important to never forget where you come from.”
Paula Celis, Colombian, Business Management

“To me, being Latino means embracing my Spanish heritage through everything I do and expressing it everywhere I go. Being Latino inspires me to be prideful in myself and reach past the expectations that are given to me by society. It also means to love and help anyone and everyone that passes through my life.”
Amber Peña, Mexican, Business

“My background and roots make me proud of where I come from and what I am becoming. To be a Latina in America means to value culture, music, history, family but most importantly to acknowledge that our community is important and needs a voice.”
Julie Diaz, Mexican American, Communication
The Student Center for Community Engagement and Inclusion in collaboration with various departments such as University Center Programs, the English Department and the Women’s Studies Institute will host several events in celebration of Latino Heritage Month, which is nationally celebrated September 15 through October 15th.
