Decades after the epic modern Civil Rights movements of the 1950s, 1960s, and 1970s, a new generation of activists emerge, providing continuity to previous freedom struggles but also raising new questions and offering a twenty-first century vision of democratic society. In this intriguing panel session, undergraduates discuss their experiences as student activists at UTSA and share their thoughts on civil and human rights activism in Texas and beyond.

This event is part of a Civil and Human Rights in Texas Series sponsored by the Department of History and the Institute of Texan Cultures (ITC). For more information, contact Gabriela Gonzalez, Associate Professor of History and ITC Visiting Scholar. [gabriela.gonzalez@utsa.edu] Also, visit the ITC Facebook page for more information about a Civil and Human Rights Symposium to be held at the ITC on April 16.